"THE FOE OF LIBERTY"

Is What an Ex-Priest Pronounces the Catholic Church.

LECTURE BY PROF. GEO. P. RUDOLPH

At Odd Fellows' Hall Last Night.

The History of the Catholic Church Reviewed and it is Accused of Many Crimes, Including the Assassination of President Lincoln—An A. P. A. Talk.

Last night in the Odd Fellows' hall Professor George P. Rudolph, formerly a Catholic priest in the Cleveland, O. diocese, and stationed at Clyde, lectured on the theme, "Romanism the Foe of American Liberty." He was introduced by Mr. D. W. Martin. The hall was pretty well filled, not a few ladies being among the audience.

Prof. Rudolph is a man of medium height and build, bald in front of the head, so that his face has a very scholarly appearance, which is increased by a full beard, about half gray. He certainly does not look like the ordinary priest, but more like a country protestant pastor. He talks very well, except for a catch in his voice which seems to be due to a frog in his throat. His style savors of the pulpit rather than of the stump. While animated, his manner is measured and free from dramatic affectation.

Speaking of Catholic relics he said if all the "holy spikes" from Christ's cross, authenticated by the infallible pope, and all the timber from the same source, could be collected by a railroad syndicate, there would be enough material to build a "holy" railroad from New York to San Francisco.

All who were present, he said, were excommunicated by the very act of being present, and he added: "I congratulate you."

One of the popes, he said, had declared that it was no sin to kill an excommunicated person, but on the contrary to kill one of them was so good a deed that it would atone and more than atone for the murder of a good Catholic. He quoted also from St. Thomas Aquinas as sustaining the same view.

He asked why President Harrison and Mr. Blaine were present at the dedication of the Catholic university. Was it fear, because they knew the greatest president the United States ever had was killed by a hireling of the Jesuits? He alleged that Lincoln's death was the result of a Jesuit plot, and that Prof. Morse had returned from a visit to Europe and warned Lincoln of this plot.

Most of the lecture was history, and ancient history at that. Constantine, St. Dominic, the Waldenses, John Huss, the Arians, Pope Gregory, the Albigenses, St. Bartholomew's night, followed in sentences of impetuous rhetoric. The inquisition, of course, attracted much attention from the lecturer.

"Every line of every page of Romish history is written in blood," he said. The Catholic theology recognizes too enormous crimes, heresy and apostasy. He had the honor to be guilty of the latter crime, and with all who listened was subject to the penalty of canon law as laid down by that church.

The Catholics held that there was no salvation outside of that church. Cardinal Manning was quoted on this point. The pope had invited all people but two classes to return to the church—these two classes being Free Masons and the A. P. A.

The bishop had authority from Rome, written on paper. When the lecturer had a dispute with the bishop of Cleveland, he asked him if the pope had any papers to show his authority.

The pope, he said, had not only the intention to possess and rule this country, but was pretty well at it. When he did possess this country, the burning of heretics would be resumed on a larger scale than usual. The clumsy but solemn wood pile would be abandoned, owing to the scarcity of wood in some localities, but heretics would be shipped to the gas region and burned in a modern crematory.

The presence of Catholics in public school boards was scored, and the fight against Catholics in the schools reviewed at some length. He objected to teaching "Ave Marias" instead of "Hail Columbias." The scandal at Norfolk, O., some years ago, in a Catholic school, where John Kuenz, the teacher, was accused of nameless offenses, was recalled in a way which created applause and laughter. His irony frequently aroused mirth, while every good point he made was heartily applauded.

The cross, he said, was no longer the symbol of Christianity, but the monogram of a secret organization, the church of Rome. "I. H. S.," also, no longer had its old significance. He ascribed it to an abbreviation of a Greek word for "fish." The phrase "barlot of Rome" seems to be a favorite with him. He claimed that education was shamefully neglected in all Catholic countries, and pointed to the history of Italy. "One teacher is worth a thousand priests, one wife and mother a thousand nuns, one husband and father a thousand monks," was a sentiment that created wild applause. "The holy boycott" was the name he gave excommunication.

When he said: "I am a representative of the American Protective Association," the applause was the heartiest of the evening. He said it was nobody's business what another man's religion was, but he knew where to draw the line between religion and popish hocuspocus. Then he quoted a German Catholic book as saying "Giordani Bruno died on a wood pile," and reviewed the history of the "boycott" on him, and spoke of the monument to Bruno erected some time ago on the spot where he was burnt. His sarcastic remarks about Bruno and Galileo caused frequent laughter.

In conclusion he reviewed the sad history of Maximilian, of Mexico, and his "papal empire." To-day the Catholic church is not allowed to hold a foot of land in Mexico. If a Catholic country could do that, why should not this great nation? There will be no peace in this country until the people send to Congress men who will repeal every law favoring popery.

This created wild applause, which was renewed when he quoted Rev. Dr. Justin Fulton as saying, "This country needs a man who will not surrender to Rome."

"I want you to live in peace with your Roman Catholic neighbors," said Professor Rudolph, and he repeated it impressively, asking the reporters to get these words down, "But we must crush the temporal power of the pope in America, or it will crush our liberties. If necessary we will fight, and the Catholics can get on a shelf and look on." He referred briefly to his own case and other similar ones, provoking frequent applause, and with the announcement that to-night he will lecture on the subject, "Why I left the Catholic church—the story of my life," he bade his auditors good night.

WANTED TO SHUFFLE OFF.

A Bridgeport Woman Makes Several Desperate Attempts at Suicide.

Mrs. John McNahan, of Bridgeport, attempted to commit suicide near the union bridge in North Wheeling, yesterday afternoon, first by throwing herself in front of a passenger train and then by drowning. She and her husband are also known as Gora.

As the afternoon passenger train was coming down under the bridge, Mrs. McNahan laid down on the track and the train was stopped just before reaching the point where she lay. After that she rushed down to the river and there made two different efforts to drown herself, and made the air blue with oaths, because she was not allowed to shuffle off, cursing all those around her, including her husband, who had appeared on the scene. Her husband works at the Top mill. Later Officer Haborfield locked both of them up on a charge of disorderly conduct.

The New Street Railway.

Last evening in this city the gentlemen composing the syndicate that proposes to build a street car line from Benwood to Moundsville, held a meeting at which a number of matters in connection with the scheme came up. The outlook for the road being built is very bright. The only matter that delays the starting of the work is the effecting of a traffic arrangement with the Wheeling Railway Company, which it is thought will soon be arranged. The contract, contrary to statements given out, has not yet been awarded.
